
Tailored press monitoring to stay on top of news in real time. How Signal helped Holman Fenwick Willan.

Kate Dunn, Brand Executive at HFW works with Signal Monitor every day. She is responsible for all things PR, from briefings, bulletins, thought leadership and how the firm is recognised in the media. It is vital that she can track news accurately and fast, and report back to the partners.

The challenge

Kate needs to identify and respond to news quickly. Prior to using Signal Monitor, she needed to supplement their media monitoring solution with manual Google searches and alerts, as news was not delivered as it happened. This resulted in spending long painful hours refreshing Google or sifting through irrelevant content, and there was often a chance something would be missed. If she wanted to change or add a search within HFW's existing press monitoring service, there was a long delay, by which time the news agenda had moved on.

"I often had to supplement my press monitoring with Google searches, especially for when we wanted to monitor a client or case, which was not part of our standard monitoring. I needed a flexible solution that I could change searches as I needed. For instance, if a client had an announcement, I had to rely on Google, which is so basic. I had to spend time sifting through the noise to find what I wanted, creating more and more work."

The solution

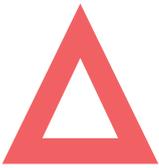

Monitoring the press media has been an issue for some time for HFW, so Kate was pleasantly surprised when she saw Signal Monitor. It was something completely different in the market, and endlessly adjustable to her changing needs. By using the platform, she could be in control of what news her team tracked and she could see it in real time, the benefits were clear.

"I never knew such a tool existed that could solve all my issues. The set up was simple, and not generic – there was thought put into it. We could tailor it to our needs, or ask our account manager, whose quick response time is overwhelming. If I ever have an issue it is solved within an hour and often even faster.

With Signal Monitor's real time news alerts, I no longer need to use Google to track our news. I can turn on real time alerts instantly, allowing me to look deeper into our industry and different news topics, finding opportunities for our firm to make a real impact."

The results

Now that Kate can track the news she needs and can share it as it happens with partners and the wider firm in seconds, she has been able to carve out the time and resource to elevate the value of the work she and her team produces. She can now be proactive in looking for new opportunities, rather than tracking what has already happened.

With Signal's topics,

Kate can expand her tracking to general news searches and topics quickly at no extra cost, allowing her to implement campaigns and stories she may not have had the necessary data to do.

"We ran an event, which a Times reporter had written an article on prior to the event taking place of his own accord and without our knowledge or involvement. Lawyers can be wary of the media, but when we came across the piece of PR from The Times almost instantly through our regular press monitoring, we were able to share it internally instantly. Partners could see power of our PR and the value it can create for the firm and so became less resistant to future campaigns. We could not have tracked such a campaign if we did not have limitless search."

"Signal has allowed us to see not just coverage related to HFM, but also what the wider industry are talking about – particularly the impact of Brexit across varying sectors in which we work. We can track the stories we are actively promoting, but also pick up the background around the subject and topic, allowing us to get more coverage."
